

TIMEBALL and TELEGRAPH TRAIL

A 97 mile walk between Deal & Greenwich

Prominent on Deal seafront is a tall building with a large black ball on the roof. This is the Timeball Tower. The current building was constructed in 1821 with a semaphore signal on the top that was used by the Coast Blockade for the Suppression of Smuggling to pass information along the coast. In 1855 it was converted to a timeball to signal to shipping in The Downs anchorage offshore which, in the time of sail, was much used by vessels waiting for a favourable wind to continue down The Channel or round into the Thames. Just before 1pm the ball would be raised to the top of the mast and at 1pm precisely the ball would drop so that ships could set the chronometers they used for determining their longitude position accurately for navigation. The drop was triggered by an electric signal along the telegraph wires of the South Eastern Railway from the Royal Observatory at Greenwich on the roof of which there is a similar timeball that was used to signal to shipping in the Thames below. This walk connects these two timeballs.

The current building was preceded by one with a shutter telegraph which as The Kentish Traveller's Companion (1799) stated "At the south end of Beach Street, close to the sea, stands a telegraph, being the first of the series... conveying intelligence from The Downs to the Admiralty". The system was set up during the French Revolutionary Wars when the Royal Navy stationed a fleet off Deal ready for operations across the Channel. The area between the Timeball Tower and the castle was an established Navy victualling yard serving their ships. Until it closed down following the peace of 1814 the series of telegraph relay stations stood on hills between Deal and London. This walk goes over each of those hills.

To preserve the integrity of the route's purpose it is necessarily aligned to some degree with the London – Dover transport corridor and although it crosses the A2/M2 four times it is less affected by traffic noise than the North Downs Way, a route that it shares in small parts. With the start and finish in built up areas some urban walking cannot be avoided but pavements never last for more than a mile before a green interlude through which the route has purposely been directed. To do so it includes part of the Green Chain Walk in London and the Saxon Shore Way further out. As well as the telegraph hills the route includes the banks of the Thames, Medway and Darent rivers and three country parks.

It readily breaks down into 5 sections which can be tackled from railway station to railway station in around 20 miles, apart from the eastern section at 27 miles which can be split into two at a bus stop. The route unbroken is 97½ miles and the stations at Dartford which is visible from the route, Rochester where city finger posts point the way and Teynham which is on the route don't add very much but Chilham is a 2 mile detour so the 5 stages as recommended add up to over 100 miles. To get to the start from Deal station exit across the car park to go through the town centre ahead to the seafront then turn right for two blocks where there is a large anchor. Greenwich station is 2/3rds of a mile from the finish down through the park and to the left on exit.

An East - West direction is recommended only for the wow factor going over Callum Hill but directions are also given for anyone starting at Greenwich. Tourist finger posts point to the start at the Royal Observatory and you will have seen Deal station shortly before you get to the end. The points at which you leave the trail for a station are marked in the route description as is the bus stop below the bridge over the A2 from where you can get a bus to Dover or Canterbury to break up the eastern section. To get there take a No.15/15A to Ileden and be ready to get off when you see a green bridge over the road.

Deal to Chilham 24.8 miles on route (27.0 between stations)

Deal to Ileden (14.4 miles)

Ileden to Chilham (12.6 miles)

Chilham to Teynham 16.4 miles (18.6)

Teynham to Rochester 20.7 miles (20.9)

Rochester to Dartford 18.7 miles (19.0)

Dartford to Greenwich 16.7 miles (17.4)

To avoid breaking up the route description too much, details of the relay station locations are described here as if following the route east to west.

Telegraph Farm, Betteshanger

4.3 miles from Deal as the crow flies or as the telescope saw, the location is marked by Telegraph Farm standing on the old Roman Road from Dover to Richborough. Sadly a telescope can now longer see to Deal with trees having grown in the way over the last 200 years. This is common across the county and the whole line of site is much impaired. The exact position of the wooden hut on top of which the telegraph shutter would have been mounted is not known.

Barham Down, Womenswold

5.6 miles further on the bungalow across the road from the modern pole beacon has been said to have been the old building. It seems highly likely from a description of a similar station near Chessington Zoo on the line to Portsmouth that the property boundaries date from when the relay station was in use but the bungalow itself is hardly a "low building with two rooms for the personel". The extent of view to be had is better appreciated as you walk on, away from the road.

Shottenden Hill

The height of both sites enabled the longest distance on the Kent line of 11.2 miles. Modern maps do not identify a Shottenden Hill and old records describe it as being in Selling parish which the hamlet of Shottenden is or as Old Wives Lees which was its postal address. A windmill that stood on ground 462ft high was a landmark visible from the sea and a 1796 letter to the Gentleman's Magazine described the telegraph on a considerable eminence with a sketch showing the telegraph with the windmill inside the ditches of a Roman encampment. Those earthworks are marked on the map although invisible in the current undergrowth but it does confirm the station was not on the previous hill passed with the current lookout point which still has a view. The same letter notes the crew roles with one observing the signals at the first station, the second making the necessary movements, the third noticing when they are repeated at the next station and the superior entering the observations in a journal.

Telegraph Bank, Ospringe

Described at the time by the Navy Board as being on Beacon Hill of which there are unhelpfully many unrelated namesakes, the nearest being an continuation of the ridge the other side of the A2 which may explain the use of the name. At the time use of telegraph in a place name wouldn't have been adopted but that Telegraph Bank has persisted as a name to be used on modern maps seems conclusive as to location. The exact position cannot be identified but the buildings near the bottom the the telephone mast may identify an area carved out of a field and never reincorporated. Views remain 5 miles back to Shottenden from a little further along the ridge as well as to the Sheerness branch, for which this was the junction, and London the other way.

Tonge

Although lower than the hill to the east the hill to the west of the road is the one called Telegraph Hill. This station being so close to the line of sight on the main line it is unknown what conditions caused messages to almost go back on themselves to get to Sheerness for The Nore anchorage. Although the walk includes this hill it a diversion onto the branch line only to avoid Sittingbourne or a longer route round it to the south.

Callum Hill

8 miles along the main route there is no trace from where the footpath crests the ridge of Callum Hill where the station might have been. What appear to be good views across to the Isle of Sheppey are a further puzzle to why Tonge was necessary. There is no evidence that signals were sent down into Chatham which had by that time become a building and repair centre rather than an operational fleet base and therefore in less need of urgent messages from the Admiralty.

Gad's Hill

10 miles across the Medway, Gad's Hill is better known as the later residence of Charles Dickens. Telegraph Road leads down to the Sir John Falstaff on the Rochester – Gravesend road but it cannot be guessed which of the houses and trees that now lie beside it obscure the original position.

Swanscombe

The water works would seem to be the most likely position for this station 6.7 miles on, now separated from the village of the same name by the modern A2.

Shooters Hill

Not on the summit but its south shoulder this station was in Hazelwoods Fields as it was then known and is now part of the hospital grounds. A print of a highwayman being hanged on Blackheath shows what is meant to be the telegraph in the background. 10.5 miles from Swanscombe the route from here was 4.5 miles down to Nunhead then across roofs to a last relay at West Square before the Admiralty.
